If RBI didn't, who went for demonetisation?

high-value notes, which were worth 86% of the cash in circulation, would be effective in addressing the stated goals of checking corruption, counterfeit currency and terror funding. Who advised the government to go for demonetisation? Were the other alternatives suggested by the central bank duly considered? If the decision was made after September 3, as Rajan indicates, what were the reasons to rush it through? The above questions now carry the full weight of being India's most intriguing political puzzle of recent years. As the economic pain worsens in the coming days, the demand for the answers to the 'who' and 'what' of demonetisation will only grow louder.

It is in the interest of the government to come clean and transparent on this, at the earliest. Failing which, all the ingredients for a politically and economically damaging scandal are in the air. Governments, as history will tell us, in the absence of facts and truths can be brutally punished by rumour, innuendo and speculation.

Senior citizens' club

The former Uttar Pradesh chief minister, while referring to the induction nine new ministers, also said that retired bureaucrats were being relied on more than politicians. The expansion is an attempt to divert attention of the people from the "failure of the government on burning problems like poverty, unemployment, Ganga cleaning" as well as promises made by the BJP during the Lok Sabha polls, Mayawati said.

"This is new drama being enacted by the BJP. The people have lost hope and are angry with the government. In place of politicians, retired bureaucrats are being relied on more in the expansion and an attempt is being made to propagate the agenda of Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh," she said in a statement.

was done, according to Modi, to reflect the focus of the 2016 Budget, which was centered around agriculture and development of women and weaker sections. Coming near the halfway mark, the second cabinet reshuffle was important also keeping in mind the crucial elections in Gujarat, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh. BJP later went on to win UP elections. East UP leaders like Anupriya Patel and Krishna Raj were inducted, and Prakash Javadekar was elevated to Cabinet rank minister in charge of HRD ministry. And again, 48 hours after his new ministers were administered oath, Modi was off to a four-nation tour in Africa beginning from July 7. He visited...
